Training Photovoice

"I had a friend who got pregnant when she was still young. She was a very nice girl who was supposed to be in school like me but instead she was selling avocados on the market. She needs to sell the avocados to be able to take care of her child. If she had known how to prevent pregnancy she would have still been in school and had a better future."

Our Training

Since the 90s, the value of Photovoice as a participatory research method has been recognized across the international development sector. Using photography, this storytelling method allows for opening up a dialogue between beneficiaries and/or stakeholders, creating a safe space for them to express themselves and reflect on issues related to project implementation. By handing over the camera to research participants and asking them to document their experiences, you get unique inside knowledge into the issues that concern the people involved.

Our training offers both theoretical knowledge and practical experience in the use of Photovoice.

Using photography, this storytelling method allows for opening up a dialogue between beneficiaries and/or stakeholders, creating a (safe) space for them to express themselves and reflect on issues related to project implementation.

Photovoice can be used for a wide range of purposes, from Monitoring and Evaluation (M&E) to advocacy, research and community based activities, as well as for marketing purposes. Our training can be valuable for anyone looking for new and creative ways to gain insight and understanding into people's lived experiences and concerns, such as: NGO staff, researchers, educators, community- health- or social workers, photographers, visual artists and marketeers.

The facilitators

Karijn Kakebeeke

Karijn Kakebeeke is a certified Photovoice trainer and documentary photographer/filmmaker. As a Photovoice trainer, Karijn developed the Photovoice programme for Rutgers and co-authored their manual.

She implemented the Photovoice method in projects in Malawi, Ghana and the Netherlands. In 2016, she implemented 'Point of View', a successful Photovoice project with refugees and local Dutch residents, with the purpose to promote integration. As a photographer, Karijn won the "BMW Paris Photo prize" in 2009 and 3rd prize in the category for foreign documentaries at the "Zilveren Camera" in 2007. Her work has been published and exhibited internationally. Karijn is currently working on a series of short films for UNHCR.

Nur Hidayati

Nur is a Programme Officer at ResultsinHealth, responsible for the Monitoring and Evaluation (M&E) portfolio. She is an expert in various public and non-public health M&E methods, particularly qualitative and participatory techniques and has years of practise in implementing these methods in health and non-health settings in Asia Pacific, Africa and Europe. Nur is a highly experienced trainer, facilitating training courses on MSC and other participatory M&E techniques, including the integration and implementation of such methods within a broader M&E framework.

ResultsinHealth

ResultsinHealth (RiH) is a public health advisory agency founded in 1993. Our vision is to improve the health of populations across the world, and our mission is to strengthen access to effective illness prevention and health care. RiH is based in the Netherlands and active in many countries. The organization provides services through short- and long-term assignments ranging from technical advice, project implementation, and capacity building to research (generating knowledge, mapping best practices, and piloting new approaches). RiH's work is guided by three principles of action: evidence-based, innovative and practice-oriented.

Humanity House

The Humanity House was founded on 9 December 2010 at the instigation of the Dutch Red Cross. The Humanity House receives support from the City of The Hague and the European Regional Development Fund of the European Commission. Located on Prinsegracht in The Hague, the Humanity House is a museum that lets you experience what it's like to live through a disaster or conflict and explores related themes in temporary exhibitions. The Humanity House also provides a platform and a place of encounter for people, organisations and agencies that address humanitarian themes.
